The Work at Height Regulations 2005 requires all employers to protect their employees from the risk of fall from their place of work.

People carrying out a task at height should be competent and have the appropriate equipment to do so.

Tasks carried out at low level heights can affect almost ALL employees and often unsuitable equipment is selected.

An employer needs to protect their employees from the risk of fall from height and protect themselves from opportunistic litigation.

The first step to a safer work environment is training and educating people to change their attitude to safety in the workplace.
